

WITH THE FARMERS

By Prof. W. F. MASSEY

Millet.

"Cannot I sow millet after wheat and get a hay crop and put the land in wheat again this fall?" I suppose that you can, on strong land, if you cut the millet as soon as the heads are out. But if you let the seed form it will be dangerous feed for horses. Far better, so far as the wheat is concerned, it would be to sow Whippoorwill peas on the wheat stubble and give them a good dressing of acid phosphate, and you can get a hay crop worth three times as much as the millet, and then can disk the stubble fine and get a better crop of wheat than you could after an exhaustive crop like millet.

Nitrate of Soda.

"I am told that the use of nitrate of soda will make the land poor. Is there any truth in this?" Injudicious use of any chemical fertilizer, merely to increase the sale of the crop, without effort towards the permanent improvement of the land, will tend to soil exhaustion. Nitrate of soda increases the vital activity of the crop, and enables the plants to draw more heavily on the natural fertility of the soil. In the soil, and hence will tend to soil exhaustion if no effort is made to increase the humus in the soil and the total dependence is on fertilizers. Nitrate of soda, like all chemical fertilizers, can be made of great use in the hands of a good farmer when rightly used, and can be made, and often is made, the means for soil exhaustion in the hands of farmers who consider fertilizer merely as a means for temporarily galvanizing an exhausted soil into some sort of production. Chemical fertilizers can be made the most rapid and efficient means for building up the soil, by a proper rotation of crops, but used as they have been by thousands of farmers, they have been the means for making the soil and the farmer poor. The farmer who farms in a good rotation, grows an abundance of legume crops and feeds them and saves and returns his manure to the land, will never need to buy nitrate of soda nor any other form of nitrogen in a fertilizer for the usual farm grain crops.

In the best wheat-growing section of Maryland, the farmers have largely abandoned the purchase of ammoniacal fertilizers and most of them use no fertilizer except acid phosphate and that on the wheat, their money crop. And since adopting this practice the wheat crop of that section has been largely increased. A fertilizer manufacturer in Baltimore told me that over 80 per cent of the fertilizer sold to these wheat farmers contains no ammonia at all, as they do not want it, getting all they need in clover, peas and manure. No grain farmer ever needs to buy nitrate of soda, and he can make a profit in the getting, through the legume crops. Special farming, with more valuable crops like truck crops and tobacco, may demand heavier complete fertilization, but the grain farmer who farms right never needs to buy nitrate.

Fixing Nitrogen.
An editor of a farm paper once told a reader that nitrogen is not fixed in the soil by legumes, as it would be washed away. I thought this was a case, but is fixed in the legumes. This is true, but all the same the formation of the nitrates is made in the soil, and the legumes take it up, and any crop associated with them will get some. That fixed in the soil is not in the form of organic nitrogen that becomes available to crops in the decay and nitrification of the organic matter. But peas, sown among corn, will increase the crop of corn. This was shown at the Kansas station and the Cornell station in New York, and I have proved it in my own experience.

But Dr. C. H. Hopkins stated to me that he found peas among corn damaged the corn. This is easily explained. Dr. Hopkins is cultivating the rich black prairie soil of Illinois, and the peas found plenty of nitrogen in the soil, and drew on that, and failed to get nitrogen from the air, and hence robbed the corn. But on most of our soil the peas will enrich the corn, and the corn will benefit by it.

Does Not Want to Mature It.
You seem to think that crimson clover will grow anywhere. But down here in the lower Tidewater section of Virginia, and without having to use so much manure. Will red clover do better than crimson? Red clover is not so well suited to your section as the winter-growing crimson clover, which will give a poorer soil than red clover will. One of the finest fields of crimson clover I have seen was right near the railroad station at Franklin, right down in the swamp country. Where I live we have as sandy and some as poor soil as in any other of the coast counties, and yet crimson clover thrives on the sandiest of ridges, when given some acid phosphate and potash. The man who objects to using manure on his land usually has little to use. He is like the man in North Carolina, who said when I urged him to grow more forage and feed stock, "I do not want to be pestered with them." The man who does not want to be pestered with stock, and simply wants to crop his land in summer and lay by all winter, seldom has the manure to use, and is apt to be the man who buys manure to feed his stock.

Growing Sage.
"Cannot we grow sage successfully? There seems to be a great demand for sage here in the fall." Certainly, nothing is more easily grown than garden sage. The seed should be sown early in spring, and the plants transplanted later to rows two feet apart and six inches in the rows. This will make a strong growth later in the summer, and can be cut green nearly to the ground and cured in any way desired, and used for medicinal purposes under aether. It will not bloom the first season, and you will have no flowers in the way. But do not keep the old plants over, for you can grow better from seed every year. There is now a new variety of sage known as Holt's Broad Leaf. This sage never blooms nor seeds, but the plants spread rapidly and can be divided in the fall. This is by far the best sage now grown, and saves the annual sowing of seed. It grows readily from green cuttings set in propagating boxes or in a hot bed in sand in spring, or by dividing the old plants. You can get plants now in small pots from Henry A. Dreer, No. 714 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., for $1 a dozen, and a dozen plants will soon give you a large quantity of sage, and you can soon get a large plantation. I have this sage now growing in my garden and have quit the sowing of seed, for the leaves of this sage are larger than two of the old sage and can be cut several times during the summer, and can be a permanent thing in the garden.

Sowing Peas.

"I wish to sow this summer cowpeas on a piece of run-down upland, of good natural quality, but badly treated. What commercial fertilizer should I use, and what crop should follow the peas?" Break the land well and then harrow in 300 pounds of acid phosphate and twenty-five pounds of muriatic potash an acre, and drill the peas in with a wheat drill set to sow two bushels of wheat an acre. This is far better than broadcasting and harrowing in, as the peas will be put in at a uniform depth and will germinate all together, and make a far better crop. You can cut the peas for hay, and the disk harrow make the surface fine and apply 400 pounds of acid phosphate in the disk harrow, and you can sow wheat and make a far better crop than by reworking the land deeply at that time. But use the disk thoroughly and make the surface fine. But if your object is rather the improvement of the land than getting a wheat crop, sow crimson clover seed on the disk, and during the winter get out on the land what manure you can spare and spread it on the clover, and in the spring turn the corn. Sow peas again among the corn at last working and cut the corn off at maturity, and if the peas are not too heavy, disk them down and fine the surface for wheat that fall, using the fertilizer as advised. But if the peas are heavy, mow them again for hay.

Clover Seed in the Chaff.

"What are crimson clover seed in the chaff worth?" It is usual to sow in the chaff four times the weight usually sown of clean seed. Then if clean seed would be worth $1.50 a bushel, the seed will germinate very well sown in the chaff, as the hulls seem to retain moisture and aid the germination. But sow at least forty pounds an acre.

Moles in Watermelon Patch.

"The moles are about to destroy my watermelons. What shall I do to destroy them?" The moles are after the worms and grubs, and the field mice follow in the rains and do the damage. Get some carbon bisulfide, and punch holes all along the runs and pour in each a teaspoonful of the liquid and the moles will keep anything in the run. The fumes will explode from fire, even from a lighted cigar. Keep corked, and put it where there is no fire.

Corn and Clover.

From Hanover County: "Can I plant corn on the same field every year, and provide I sow crimson clover at the last working and turn it under the following spring, with an application of 400 pounds of Thomas phosphate to the acre? I have been told that it cannot be done, but if I keep the soil filled with humus-making material and apply phosphoric acid in the shape of Thomas phosphate, I am of the opinion that it can be done, with increasing crops every year." There is no doubt that by this method, if you always get a good stand of corn, you can make increasing crops every year. But I cannot say. But I have known it done for four years in succession, with greatly increased crops. But I am of the opinion that after a while you may introduce diseases in the corn, or that the clover may fail. But, of course, you can be sure of this. In the meantime you can be getting a large amount of humus into the soil. In your section the last working of early corn may be rather early for the clover, and it might be better to sow peas among the corn, and after the corn is cut off, disk down the peas and sow the clover in late August or early September. This would give you still more humus-making material. The line in the soil of phosphate would make it better than acid phosphate, as it would tend to keep the soil sweet, and make it favorable to the clover. Such a short rotation can be made for a time, but I believe that you will after a while find it better to lengthen it.

Growing Lettuce for Market.

"I would like to have some information in regard to growing lettuce for market." You are now right between seasons for lettuce. I make the first sowing for the fall crop early in August. At that time it is often hard to get the seed up. I prepare a bed and scatter the seed thinly broadcast and rake them in lightly. Then I cover the bed with some gunny sacks and water on them. The sacks will prevent the surface from drying and crusting, and the seed will soon germinate, and the sacks must be removed. I use seed of the Big Boston. The plants are transplanted to a very heavily-manured plot and set in rows fifteen inches apart, and eight inches in the row. This for the outside fall crop to head in late October or early November.

The Second Sowing.

Seed of the Big Boston lettuce are sown early in September. Then get your frames ready. The frames are made to accommodate the 3x6 feet hot bed sashes. I use the double-glazed sashes, that is, with two layers of glass and a dead air space between them. These sashes, on a well-banked frame, will keep out all frost in winter. The plants are sown as large enough to handle, are set in the frames eight inches apart. The soil in the frames must be well watered with rotten manure. Then as soon as the plants are well started in growth I apply about one-fourth of a pound of each of a high grade commercial fertilizer strong in nitrogen. The sashes are not put on till the nights get frosty. This crop should come in for Christmas and New Year. With double-glazed sashes you can then sow beets and radishes in alternate rows six inches apart, and the radishes can be pulled during the winter and the beets will have a foot space, and in the spring the sashes can be taken off and used on another frame for transplanting the early tomato plants. It is not well to follow the lettuce crop with lettuce, and if you want a crop of you should have another line of frames, and sow lettuce in them in October, and transplant them in November, and this crop will carry you till early spring. Then as soon in spring as the soil can be worked, sow seed of the Hanson or the Wonderful lettuce outside and transplant for the late heading to finish the lettuce season.

ORANGE COUNTY

Defeats Taliaferro by Vote of 455 to 178—Embrey Is With-out Opposition.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Fredericksburg, Va., June 6.—In the county primary of Orange County for the Democratic nomination for the House of Delegates there were two candidates—George L. Browning and Barclay Taliaferro. Mr. Browning was nominated, the vote being: for Browning, 455, and for Taliaferro, 178. The vote was small, not over half of the eligible Democratic votes of the county being cast.

The time limit having expired last night for candidates for the House of Delegates from this district, composed of the county of Spotsylvania and the city of Fredericksburg, to file their notice with the respective chairmen of Spotsylvania County and Fredericksburg, being the only one to comply by filing said notice, and forwarding receipts for the same, he was declared the Democratic nominee for the House of Delegates, to be voted for in the regular election in November, without the formality of a primary. He will probably have no opposition in the general election. Mr. Embrey is a prominent young business man, has large business interests, is a brother of Judge Alvin T. Embrey, a former member of the House of Delegates, and of A. W. Embrey. He is at present a member of the City Council of Fredericksburg, in which body he has served for several years.

Open Air Flower Market.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Fredericksburg, Va., June 6.—The women of the hospital here held an open air flower market yesterday afternoon and night for the benefit of the hospital, and it proved a fine success. There was a parade in the afternoon of children on bicycles and tricycles, all decorated, and a drill by school children, and at night a May pole dance and folk dance by the students of the Fredericksburg State Normal School. In addition, refreshments were sold and there were diversions of various sorts. Over $100 was realized for the good cause.
